Summary: This is a poem from Duo's point of view.

What We See

> <meta name="ProgId"> What We See

This is kind of a poem from Duo's point of view. He is dying and he's thinking about Sister and Father Maxwell who were his only family when he was at an orphanage, and also he's thinking about his friends like Hilde. I just wrote this because I don't think enough people write about Duo when he's angry, when he's the God of Death.

What We See

Tell me why are we so blind to see that this peace is dead?

These people that could smile with a bullet through the head.

Look at my life, how was it perfect?

Everyone I ever loved is gone.

Tell me what your gonna do when judgment comes for you?

I'm going to hell, and maybe you will too.

This isn't real, this isn't peace.

But now all this madness will cease.

Yes I've changed since you've seen me last.

I'm a killer now, but is that really worse than my past?

Mercy is gone from my mind.
As I walk through the valley of death,
I see all these blind fools.
They see a happy place, with flowers and green grass.
When all that is here is graves and stormy skies.
Look at me, what do you see?
Don't say you see a kind heart,
Because all that's here is a cold shell,
Kindness just doesn't seem too suit me.
Now look at all these fools,
Living in a peaceful paradise.
But all that's here is pain and destruction.
Now try to tell me that it's all ok,
Try to tell me that everything is perfect.

End
file.
